

Weather Forecasting for Agriculture and Industry

edited by James A. Taylor

List of Contents

|   |                                                                                                                                  |     |
|---|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
|   | Foreword                                                                                                                         | ix  |
|   | Preface                                                                                                                          | xi  |
| 1 | The revaluation of weather forecasts.J. A. TAYLOR                                                                            | 1   |
| 2 | The organisation of meteorological advice for agriculture and industry.C. V. SMITH                                           | 19  |
| 3 | Problems and practice in longer-range weather and climate forecasting.H. H. LAMB                                             | 34  |
| 4 | Agronomic implications of long-term weather forecasting.J. P. HUDSON                                                         | 44  |
| 5 | Meteorological forecasting and agricultural management.A. N. DUCKHAM                                                         | 56  |
| 6 | The weather forecasting requirements of specific types of agriculture and horticulture.W. H. HOGG                            | 69  |
| 7 | The value and relevance of weather study and weather forecasting in the profitable production of early potatoes.W. L. THOMAS | 86  |
| 8 | Seasonal forecasting of the spring growth and flowering of grass crops in the British Isles.M. G. ROY and J. M. PEACOCK      | 99  |
| 9 | Weather forecasting for industry.R. A. BUCHANAN                                                                              | 115 |

|    |                                                                                                                                                                 |     |
|----|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 10 | The weather forecaster and the tourist—the example of the Scottish skiing industry.A. H. PERRY                                                              | 126 |
| 11 | Weather and the daily use of outdoor recreation areas in Canada.A. H. PAUL                                                                                  | 132 |
| 12 | Simulation model studies of the impact of weather factors on road construction and the movement of heavy equipment in agricultural operations.J. D. MCQUIGG | 147 |
| 13 | Weather forecasting for the prevention of icy roads in the United Kingdom.J. S. HAY and C. P. YOUNG                                                         | 155 |
| 14 | Weather forecasting and river management.R. C. GOODHEW and E. JACKSON                                                                                       | 166 |
| 15 | The demand for beer as a function of weather in the British Isles.R. S. GANDER                                                                              | 184 |
| 16 | The problem of forecasting the properties of the built environment from the climatological properties of the green-field site.J. K. PAGE                    | 195 |
| 17 | Weather and the short-term forecasting of electricity demand.C. V. BARNETT                                                                                  | 209 |
|    | Selected Classified Bibliography                                                                                                                                | 224 |
|    | Appendix: Meteorological Office Services—Weather advice to the community (reproduced by permission of the Director of the Meteorological Office).               | 232 |
|    | AUTHOR INDEX                                                                                                                                                    | 243 |
|    | SUBJECT INDEX                                                                                                                                                   | 246 |